LETTERING STYLE SHEET

The Porthcove Light · issue 3 · page 7

One line of the script is one balloon: the speaker, the kind in braces when it is not plain speech, a colon, the words. The shapes below are the ones on page 2.

- Speech. `tomas: Make it two.` An oval; the tail stops short of the speaker's mouth.
- Joined. Two `tomas:` lines in a row butt into one outline, with one tail.
- Thought. `biscuit{thought}:` A cloud, with bubbles that rise towards the head.
- Whisper. `maya{whisper}:` A dashed outline and smaller letters.
- Shout. `tomas{shout}:` A burst, in bold, a size up.
- Radio. The skipper speaks through the set: the cast gives every `skipper:` line a jagged outline and a zigzag tail.
- Caption. `caption:` Narration in a yellow box, butted into a corner.
- Inner voice. `maya{inner}:` What she does not say aloud: no tail, a grey box, italics.
- Editor's note. `note:` Small, in the panel's lower corner.
- Sound effect. `sfx{at="16% 28%" rotate=-10}:` No balloon: display letters in red with a white outline, placed and turned by hand.
- Off-panel. `tomas{tail=end}:` The speaker is outside the picture; the tail runs to the panel's edge.
- Pinned. `skipper{at="44% 22%"}:` The balloon is centred on that point of the picture, whatever the crop.

Ten o'clock.
The storm had found the headland.
Porthcove light, this is the Gannet. Engine's dead. We're drifting.
Gannet, I hear you. Hold on.
The Gannet had fished out of Porthcove for forty years. —Ed.
It's all right, Biscuit. Grandpa's done this before.
Has he, though?
Gannet! Steer for the light! Keep it on your bow!
KRA-KOOM
We see it... we see the light...
Easy now. Bring her round slow.
Come on. Come on. Come on.
It took them two hours.
Morning.
Make it two.
One's for the cat.
Thank you, keeper! I owe you a crate of mackerel!
Biscuit says three.
